But France also has stressed the need to bring the hijackers to trial for killing a U.S. Navy diver, Robert Dean Stethem, aboard the com-mandeered jetliner, As-Safir said.

The Italian ambassador, Antonio Mancini, said after the meeting: "We have discussed ways of improving Beirut airport, because this is a very important problem for

"We have also demanded that the Lebanese government emphatically condemn the TWA hijacking and tell us about the means with which it will deal with the situation after the hijack," he said.

Mr. Turk later met with the ambassadors of the East European bloc and with Far Eastern envoys. Selim Salam, chairman of Middle East Airlines, said in a statement published Friday that the boycott would not "break the back" of Lebanon's national carrier. But the company would be in serious trouble if Europe joined the sanctions, he said.

He said be had received "positive assurances" from France, Switzerland and Greece that they would not stop flights to or from Beirut.

Doctors Cited in South Africa Death

JOHANNESBURG (AP) - A medical panel found two white government doctors guilty Friday of misconduct in the 1977 death of Steve Biko, leading black figure who became a martyr in the struggle against the rule of the white minority.

The panel ruled that the two physicians failed to provide adequate care shortly before Mr. Biko died in police custody. One doctor was reprimanded and the other was barred from practicing medicine for three months, but that penalty was suspended. The panel said one of the doctors allowed police to move Mr. Biko 750 miles (1,206 kilometers) by road to a prison hospital after he was injured, the panel said.

An inquiry at the time of Mr. Biko's death found that he probably died of brain injuries received in a scuffle with police. The death in September 1977 drew a world outcry. His family claimed Mr. Biko, 30, died of head injuries inflicted when police beat him during interrogation. Police said he accidentally hit his head on a wall while officers were subduing him after he became violent during questioning.

Teddy Roosevelt And a Hostage Crisis

When a Tangier bandit named Ahmed ben Mohammed Raisuli kidnapped the elderly Ion Perdicaris in 1904 and demanded a ransom, President Theodore Roosevelt proclaimed "Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead!" and dispatched warships to the scene. Mr. Perdicaris was promptly released. That was the way one American president dealt with a hostage crisis. Or so the story goes. ...Theo Lippman Jr., writing in The Baltimore Sun, says that the story has a few holes. Mr. Perdicaris, to avoid Confederate seizure of his property during the Civil War, had renounced his American citizenship in favor of Greek nationality. # Why Japan's Chips Won outer memory chips is over. Japan has won. American companies, despite investments of hundreds of millions of dollars, cannot match the price at which Japanese 256,000-bit memory chips are flooding the market. An Idaho firm has accused the Japanese of dumping 64,000-bit memory chips at 50 percent below production cost. Yet another segment of manufacturing has fallen to Japan, and thousands more Americans have lost their jobs.

How can further inroads be prevented? The miconductor Industry Association believes if is unfairly locked out of the Japanese market, so that its competitors have an unassailable home base from which to capture markets in America. It wants Washington to browbeat Japan into buying more American chips. The chip-makers' predicament affects others, too.
If the Japanese should seize the lead in designing memory and logic chips, they will gain a strategic advantage in every product that uses them, from autos to robots and computers.

Faults of national policy have contributed to the chip-makers' distress. The strength of the dollar makes Japanese chips 20 to 30 percent cheaper than American equivalents. The Hitachi office in San Jose, California, can advise its distributors of another kind of memory chip: "Quote 10 percent below competi-tion. If they requote, bid 10 percent under again. The bidding stops when Hitachi wins ... 25 percent distributor profit guaranteed." A major and long-standing disadvantage for American chip-makers investing in new plants is that their cost of capital is at least twice that enjoyed by their Japanese competitors. That is not because Japanese chip-makers get subsidized loans. It is because the pension and tax systems in Japan strongly encourage saving over borrowing — the reverse of America's pattern - and household savings are passed on at low rates to corporate borrowers. Americans save 5 percent of their disposable income, Japanese more than 25 percent.

Besides the advantages America creates for them, Japanese manufacturers also have home-grown assets. Foremost is a highly trained and motivated work force. The government often protects infant industries, particularly those trying to develop a new technology to world standards. But behind protective walls, Japanese companies vie fiercely with one another, gaining the ability to compete abroad when protection is lifted.

The industrial policy pursued by the Ministry of International Trade and Industry may not deserve all the successes attributed to it, but the ministry is part of a consensus-making process from which Japan seems to draw the benefits of both competition and cooperation.

These general advantages leave little maneuvering room for American manufacturers un-less they happen to be protected by superior technology or know-how. In the case of memory chips. Japanese companies worked for years at refining production technique and increasing market share. Maybe clannish buying practices and government protection played a role. But thrift and hard work are more significant explanations. The Reagan adminis-tration could best help the semiconductor and other industries with fundamental reforms rather than tailor-made remedies. To reduce the strength of the dollar by reducing the deficit is the immediate priority.

Increasing saving is the long-term solution.

Too bad that incentives for saving have almost evaporated from notions of tax reform. To search for a quick fix is to ignore the reasons for the loss of the memory chip race.

Pressure on the Lebanese

The Reagan administration's announce-ment once the TWA hostages were free that it would seek to "isolate" Beirut airport pro-duced some predictable responses. Those who seek forceful retaliation have deplored it as a mere gesture, a sign of weakness. Many Lebanese have deplored it as an overreaction that unfairly stigmatizes them, will hurt their country but miss the terrorists and may even play into the hands of factions who have their own political reasons for isolating Lebanon.

Prime Minister Rashid Karami said that kebanon "is all hijacked, as President Reagan knows." He added that "if any power is to blame for the state of violence prevailing here
... it is the United States. Of what is Lebanon guilty, that it is treated in this manner?"

Lebanon, of course, is not "guilty." It is a victim, not a criminal, among nations. It is, as ils government says, the theater and not the agent of terrorism. Yet the Reagan administra-tion is proceeding down the right track. The isolation of Beirut airport — actually, it will be the further isolation of a facility whose use is already much restricted — is not a complete or satisfying response to the hijacking. It is not offered as that But it does seem to us to provide some of those who have power on the ground - Nabih Berri, for instance, and the Syrians - with an extra incentive to limit at least this one form of terrorism. It does not entail the unwise use of force.

Washington is asking other governments to washington is asking other governments to join it in barring flights to and from Beirut airport, including flights by Lebanon's Middle East Airlines, which is one of the country's largest employers. Not all other countries may formally join — the French own part of the airline — but some surely will. Secretary of State George Shultz says the purpose is to put the airport off limits "until the people of Beirut put terrorists off limits." At least it is worth a test; that much is fair. And the purpose is as much precautionary as retaliatory. An airport should be safe to be sanctioned.

When the TWA flight was hijacked from Athens, the Reagan administration also put pressure on Greece, warning Americans away from the airport there. The Greeks complained bitterly at having been singled out, and agreed quickly to step up security at the airport. Pressure is not the single solution to the hijacking problem, but it can help.

Other Opinion

Cheaper Oil: A Mixed Blessing

Western pundits are rooting for cheaper oil, which they believe would lower inflation and interest rates and spur economic growth worldwide. It may not be so simple if the U.S. dollar, in which oil is traded, remains strong. While consumers stand to benefit from lower costs of certain goods and services, savings could take some time to filter down, if at all. A large drop in the oil price could further spur Western governments to levy taxes on oil imports. And even if it occurs, a broad pickup in industrial economies need not benefit [the developing countries] if trade protectionism continues to close off their major markets.

As painful a blow it will be for their national treasuries and economic development, an oil price cut would nevertheless underscore yet again for Malaysia and other (developing countries] the dangers of heavy dependence on primary commodity exports and the necessity for economic diversification.

- The Business Times (Kuala Lumpur).

The world would undoubtedly benefit from a gradual further fall in the price. As financial pressure on even the Gulf states increases, even the Third World countries who have benefited from Gulf aid and jobs to counteract oil costs must be thinking that almost everyone would be better off without OPEC.

- The Times (London).

Reasons for Reagan's Thrall

A Washington correspondent is a presidentwatcher, and the question most often thrown at me—especially by Europeans on the liberal left—is how can a flawed old man of limited brain power and curiosity, with a stunted sensibility (Bitburg), continue to hold America in political thrall? Why is [he] not hated by his political foes and blamed for foreign failure and domestic hardship, as Mrs. Thatcher is hated and blamed for British woes?

Part of the answer is so obvious that it is often ignored. Americans, despite their melting pot origins, form a cohesive society — with many exceptions, including most blacks — enjoying shared goals and a high degree of equal opportunity. It is revealing that in Brit-ain the term 'middle class' means the specially privileged, while in the United States it wers everyone who earns a decent wage.

Classlessness creates political cohesion.

Representative government is most of the time a misnomer. It is not "representative," it is elitist. People who know better, or believe they know better, are put in charge of a nation's affairs. [But] Mr. Reagan is the people. [He is] "the sort of guy who could be on the town bowling team." The average [American] has been quite prepared to forgive Mr. Reagan his ignorance and his holidays, in return for having a human being in the White House. - Robert Chesshyre, The Observer (London).

No Winners and No Panacea in Lebanon

P ARIS — The crisis of the TWA hostages has given the American public a glimpse of the hopeless, shifting imbroglio that has gripped Lebanon for a decade. The argument about who has won this round reflects intricacies of the murderous fight in the area and distortions of the limelight's glare. Nobody wins in Lebanon.

Nor does anyone trying to use its passions and greeds for outside purposes impose an order for long - not the Palestine Liberation Organization, not Israel, not the United States, not Iran, not Syria. Advantages tilt. But there is no settlement because there are too many rival factions backed by too many competing interests.

The focus now is on terrorism, but that is a by-product, not a cause. The region's growing probem, it has been said, is not the rise of extremes but the rise of an extremist center whose sympathies are engaged by violence.

The lack of effective authority, the convenient location and cosmopolitan flavor, easy access to arms and money have made Beirut the hub of international terrorism for years. It is not the source, but it cannot escape degradation for harboring such a commerce.

Attempting to cut off the airport makes sense

Attempting to cut off the airport makes sense as a temporary preventive measure that will complicate the plans of hijackers. They have had it too easy. But the underpinnings are too amorphous, too pervasive to be liquidated with precise blows at a commanding nerve center to destroy the "infrastructure," as Washington suggests.

The effort must be to isolate and frustrate the terrorists. There are some signs that a sense of the world's revulsion is spreading even among those who have sponsored terrorism in the past. Even Iran denounced the hijacking.

But it may also be a new recognition that governments must accept some international rules if they expect the international privileges of statehood. It is time to draft a convention, like the Geneva convention on prisoners of war. States that refuse to sign and apply it will name themselves accomplices of terroris themselves accomplices of terrorism.

The fact is that no political cause has been won by using terrorism. Terrorists figured in the fight for Israeli and Algerian independence, but the wars were won because of broad popular support. The same was true of Iran's revolution.

The recent spread of Moslem terrorism based on fanaticism has no such clearly defined goal.

Robin Wright wrote in her forthcoming book, "Sacred Rage — The Crusade of Militant Islam," that the militants "revolution is against foreign domination and encroachment in every aspect of their lives — symbolized most often and most recently by the United States." The Shiite militants' stand is a shrick of frustration against the pains and human cost of joining the modern world and against the inability to share in its benefits. It is a mistake to conclude from the latest outrage that Shiism has a particular affinity for terror, or that terrorism is especially Shiite. There are several forces of violent fanaticism in the world. Islam is vulnerable because this happens to be a period of impatient awakening, sparked by Iran.

Several factors have converged: the spread of education and broadcasting, the mirage that oil power could restore ancient glory; the yearning for equal standing; the sense of failure, which the orthodox can attribute to divergence from the path of pious righteousness.

Understanding this background is necessary to be aware of the pitfalls. There is no more a simple way to deal with it than there is a simple way for the afflicted people to overcome their furies. Neither retribution nor appeasement will work. But it is possible to strengthen the appeal of reason and peace, avoiding illusions.

Sometimes this takes subtlety. The U.S. statement on the preservation of Lebanon, its government on the preservation of Lebanon.

ernment, its stability and security" that broke the last obstacle to the hostages' return was indeed a concession, although to Syria, not to Lebanese militants. It abandoned the standard phrasing of policy on Lebanon's "sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity," which had been aimed against Syria. The change was realistic.

Is a laso needs a realistic change: It should end its attempts to create a frontier buffer zone end its attempts to create a troutier burier zone with its puppet South Lebanese Army, in return for pledges by the Shiites to do what they are determined to do anyway — keep Palestinians from the area. Lebanon is so ensuarled that it is possible to find common interests among erstwhile enemies. That is better than finding more enemies on the tricky road ahead.

The New York Times.

Relieved Bystanders Can Return to Tax Reform

WASHINGTON — It is a good W thing the American hostages came home when they did. Not just for their sake. The yellow ribbons had begun to come out. Like the radio campaigns to turn on car headlights during the day, yellow ribbons are a well intended show (for whom?) of "support" for the hostages' release. Unfortunate-ly, freedom is not something that you can honk for. A show of solidarity is fine, but only if attached to some real action. Otherwise, yellow ribbons and headlights and all the other substitutes for action become mere advertisements of defeat.

The yellow ribbon mentality, a kind of domestic variant of the Stockholm syndrome, springs not from cowardice or lack of nerve but from bewilderment. From a special kind of bewilderment — that of the innocent bystander. Its plea is the bystander's plea: Why me? And its demand is the bystander's demand:

to be left alone. But, as Ronald Steel points out in the current issue of The New Republic, to be a postwar American is to give up such innocence. America is a country with values, interests and a destiny, all of which it has decided, democratically, to take abroad. Americans support a cer-tain international order, which makes them, all of them, the enemy of those at war with that order. Bystanders may move to Geneva. In contrast, the characteristic yellow ribbon response to disruption of cozy normality is to take offense. Forty years ago Walter Lippmann noted this same irritation in the American view of war as "an intol-erable criminal interference with the nature of things," and as "an outrage upon our privacy and upon our rights." So today with terror-ism. How dare it disturb travel, sleep, prime-time viewing? Passivity and a bystander's world view are not all. A feature of the yellow ribbon mentality is its confusion of survival with courage. It figures: If to be left alone is a great end, then surviving is a great virtue.

Allyn Conwell, hostage "spokesman," was the subject of effusive media praise. So what if he said that he was "distressed" by President Reagan's demand for the release, together with the TWA hostages, of the present president kidnemed. of the seven previously kidnapped Americans? "Not wise or prudent," advised Mr. Conwell. In similar circumstances, any of us might step over the body of another to climb out of our prison. But is it heroism? The yellow ribbon mentality is more than a psychological oddity. It has policy consequences. If the ideal is simply to tend one's vineyards unmolested, then, when an outrage objective becomes an immediate re-behind you. No reaction.

While the bijacking is taking place we are told that it is too early to talk of any reaction. And after it is over we are told it is too late. It is over. Why make trouble?

The wish to hide at all costs is embarrassing to admit. So it wears a moral cloak: How can one retaliate if it will injure innocent bystanders? (Bystanders, again.) Fine. If what is required is that any retribution be discriminate and just, there is a solution: Repeal the executive order prohibiting assassination. Or, bet-ter, amend it to read: "except those who carry out or support terrorist attacks on U.S. citizens." Instead the Reagan administration's first response was to ask Lebanon to extradite the murderers. A sad joke. There is no Lebanon. And its nongovernment can no more ex-tradite terrorists than it could extricate American hostages.

The administration calls for closing Beirut airport. The secretary of state asks others to join in a boycott. What can that do beyond clearing the runways for the exclusive use of terrorists? It takes a bomb, not a boycott, to close a runway.

Where is the president? As the like the TWA hijacking ends, the advocate of a muscular foreign policy, he does not look like a worshiper at the church of the yellow ribbon. But he seems inclined to lea its pacifying influence do its work. That nicely reduces the pressure on him to take any real action - and permits him to return to his fundamental interest: taxes.

White House officials say that Mr. Reagan will "attempt to convert his enhanced popularity" coming out of the hostage crisis, by "stepping up his campaign for tax reform and budget cuts."
This is an old story, perhaps the story, of the Reagan presidency: a president who professes an ambi-tious foreign policy, and then in-vests his vast but finite political capital on other, more domestic matters. The result: The defense consensus he inherited (a gift from Iran and Afghanistan, among other disaster areas) has eroded. The terrorism he vowed to fight increases.

And America, awaiting the articulation of a foreign policy for nonbystanders, ties yellow ribbons.

Washington Post Writers Group.

it. "What we are most alraid of," Mr. Gyohten said, "is giving the impression that the government is not concerned about the deficit." The political reality is that the government is under no real pressure from the Japanese public to boost spending for such things as better housing, even though it is painfully apparent that housing is one of Ja-pan's most critical needs. Politicians know that Japan has made enormous strides in its standard of living. Per capita income ap-proaches two-thirds of that in the United States. "We started off with nothing at the end of the war," said a Japanese friend, "and now 90 percent of the people say in response to polls that they are in the middle class. It is a pretty egalitarian society."

Mr. Kunihiro agrees: "The biggest shortage here is land, but people seem to be satisfied with their small residences. They have plenty of money for cars, or to go abroad for vacations. They save mon-ey to send the children to school. There's no threat of war, and very little violence. So everybody is satisfied to some extent, and there is very little force for change."

C AMBRIDGE, Massachusetts — The crisis in OPEC is clear to all. Hardly noticed, though, is the extent to which the second oil price shock the rapid rise in prices between 1979 and 1981 — is almost over, at least for the American consumer.

The price of oil has been falling for four years. Since 1981 it has dropped more than 25 percent. The drop is even sharper if we take inflation into account. In real terms, oil prices have fallen 40 percent since 1981.
Yet even this does not capture the full extent of the drop. When corrected for inflation, American oil prices in 1985 are just about back to where they were in 1975. If we put 1975 oil prices into 1985 dollars, we find that a barrel of imported oil in the United States in 1975 cost $27.66. Compare that to the April price of $27.61. The change is even more striking if we turn to the price at the American gasoline pump. Again, putting 1975 prices into 1985 dollars, the American motorist was paying only a dime less then than now — $1.12 in 1975.

compared to today's $1.22. Four factors have been responsible for this: conservation, the recession, weak economic activity and growth of alternative, non-OPEC supplies. All of this has brought an era of surplus in which oil prices have nowhere to go but down. To be sure, what is true for the United States is emphatically not true for other parts of the world. Oil prices, for the most part, are denominated in dollars, and the strengthening dollar has overwhelmed falling oil prices for Western Europe. The result is that in real terms the Europeans are

The Oil Surplus Is Big, Disarming and Temporary

The forces that brought oil prices down continue to work. World oil demand is proving very slow to recover, even with renewed economic growth. Many markets for oil have shrunk permanently. Coal and nuclear power have taken over much elec-tricity production from oil — to such an extent that France, for instance, is now trying to sell its nuclear-generat-ed electricity, once a program of na-tional survival, to its neighbors at bargain rates. And other markets will be constricted. Americans will continue to replace cars that get 12 miles to the gallon with cars that get 26 and 27 miles to the gallon.

American consumers are winners from falling oil prices. Less of their budgets will go to paying for energy, meaning that they will have more money to spend for other purposes.

The non-oil developing world is a big winner. And so is the Reagan administration. Falling oil measurements.

ministration: Falling oil prices stimulate economic growth and are a most welcome antidote to inflation. Both are very valuable in a time of huge and intractable budget delicits and uncertain economic performance.

If America were only a consumer of energy, all this would be enough. It is also a producer, and falling oil prices trouble and threaten "good faith" energy investment. This ap-paying more than they ever have in the past. The effects of the strong dollar on their prices are rightly referred to as the "third oil shock."

The forces that brought oil prices down continue to work. World oil demand is program year, slow to rewill seek a tariff to protect America's domestic energy economy.

Further weakness in price will undermine the rationale for a great deal of existing and new investment in energy. Energy consumers will con-clude that conservation investment is less important. Oil companies will reduce their efforts to develop new oil fields in frontier regions.

Does this mean that the world will again face a difficult energy situation in the future? Not for several years, at least. The surplus of oil and energy worldwide is so large that tankers and oil installations in the Gulf region can be attacked and the price of oil goes down, not up. That cushion will be quite a number of years in eroding. Oil will become more like other com-modities, with volatile prices. Barring a major technological development, however, the reduction in energy investment will come back to baunt us at some point. Market realities will again give way to geological realities — the concentration of oil reserves in OPEC and in the Middle East. And that will eventually put the era of surplus behind us.

The writer is president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates and educr of "Just Another Commodity? The Reshap-ing of the Oil Industry." He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

With a doctor standing behind him, Tek Kor explains why he decided against a vasectomy.

BANGKOK - Tek Kor's days as Thailand's one-man population explosion are not OVEL YEL

The 41-year-old meatball vendor and father of 22 arrived here Thursday to undergo a much-publicized operation at a free "vasectomy festival" organized by Thailand's leading family planning campaigner.

But he changed his mind at the last minute claiming he had been tricked into believing he would be paid 1 million baht ($36.586). He drove off with six of his seven wives with a vow to marry his eighth wife soon and produce still more children.

Mechai Viravaidya, the organizer of the free vasectomy clinic, had hoped that the conversion of Thailand's "family planning enemy No. 1" would help dispel fears among Thai men that a vasectomy would result in sexual impotence. But he denied having offered any money to Tek Kor and said he did not know how he got the impression he would be paid.

Before Tek Kor withdrew, there had been concerted efforts by local and American groups that oppose birth control to sabotage what they called Mr. Mechai's "depopulation program."

The coup attempt occurred shortly after Colonel Conte left to attend a meeting in Togo.

Its defeat was confirmed in Lome by officials close to President Conté, who was to return to Guinea later Friday, and also by the Guinean Embassy in Paris. The chief of staff of the gendarmerie, Major Makan Camara, said the coup attempt began at 10 P.M. Thursday when Colonel Traore, accompanied by a small number of policemen, entered the radio station with the complicity of some technicians working there.

The rebel leader had the technicians broadcast a tape aunouncing seizure of power, the major said. He said attempts by loyalist troops to recapture the radio station began shortly after 3 A.M. and that the forces were able to enter The radio quoted the minister of the building an hour later, after shelling its generator plant. By Michael Gibson

VENICE — The good archi-tect's reward in the life to come must be a dreamed-of opportunity to build a bridge or a palace in Venice, a place that in 1494 was already being described by the French ambassador, Philippe de Commynes, as "the most triumphant city that ever was seen."

Venice is already a dream, but an exhibition at the Museo Correr on the Piazza San Marco presents a whole series of dreams within the dream — plans, architects' drawings, scale models and painters' visions of constructions that were never built, although many of them could well have been.

One of the earliest is a 1554 design by Andrea Palladio for the reconstruction in stone of the wooden Rialto Bridge, which had been destroyed by fire 40 years ear-

A second 19th-century feature is hygiene, including projects, sub-mitted by a French firm, for structures that are genteelly referred to as "chalets de nécessité."

The third novelty is that affordlier. Palladio's plan was not adopted, but he published it in one of his books, and his drawings inspired artists such as Canaletto and painting, on loan from a private destrians to the Giudecca, an island too far removed from the rest of ing buildings were not damaged. ents as an architect and his taste as a collector, Two celebrated Hoparths and an outstanding collection of architectural drawings are among the museum's finest pieces. The dizzy profusion of objects that overspills the rooms testifies to Soane's eclectic and obsessive collecting, which ecompassed everything from classical antiquities and Renaissance bronzes to Peruvian pottery and Napoleonic Medals. Hardly less remarkable is the building itself, which Soane designed and decorated in a highly personal style. Students of archi-tecture admire the ingenuity of the construction and the elaborate architectural conceits Soane employed; others simply marvel at the astounding oddity of the place.

The building to the west, No. 14, was constructed in 1824 but never occupied by him. No. 12 was Soane's home from 1792 to 1812. It was left in trust as part of the endowment and now contains a reading room open to scholars and most of the 20,000 architectural drawings executed by the Adams brothers.

The bulk of Soane's collection is in No. 13, the museum proper. The trustees have attempted to preserve the house as it was when Soane lived there, with his furniture, books and pictures arranged as he had them. The effect, wrote Henry. James in "A London Life," is of "2 sort of Saturday afternoon of one's youth — a long, rummaging visit, under indulgent care, to some excentric and rather alarming old

The original Picture Room includes many of Soane's architectural drawings, several drawings by Piranesi and the Hogarth pain-ings. Hogarth's cynical view of pol-iticking, portraying the corruption and buffoonery of "An Election," was painted in 1754. It is one of the artist's most important paintings, and it hangs beside another still-better known: "The Rake's Progress" is Hogarth's most famous work. The eight pictures in the series depict Thomas Rakewell's moral degeneration and decline, from his inheritance of a fortune through his ruin by profligacy and ultimate confinement in the mad-

Many of the furnishings - tubular steel chairs, for example - were created by friends and colleagues of Gropius, and though unsentimental by design, they are charged with both personal associations and a sense of 20th-century design history.

Built with standard, mass-produced materials, the house nonetheless incorporates many elements of traditional New England wooden architecture. By Max Wykes-Joyce ONDON - At the Leger Galleries, with a catalog sold in aid of the National Trust (Trust in Wales), are 47 watercolors from the National Library of Wales, almost all landscapes and mostly of Wales, a romantic terrain particularly at-tractive to watercolorists such as Paul Sandby (1730-1809), Moses Griffith (1747-1819), Julius Caesar Ibbetson (1759-1817), Michael "Angelo" Rooker (1749-1831), Nicholas Pocock (1740-1821) and John "Warwick" Smith (1749-

Agnews has mounted a selection, partly loan and partly stock, of major 18th-century Venetian paintings, with a catalog sold in aid of the Venice in Peril Fund. The most famous names — Tiepolo, Ricci, Longhi, Guardi and Canaletto - are well represented Canaletto's "Warwick Castle: the South Front" shows what an extraordi-narily fine painter he was when not compelled to make yet another half-dozen souvenirs of Venice before sundown for the Grand Tourist trade. A poble aspect of Francesco Guardi, too, is to be seen in "Architectural Capriccio with a Campanile and the Lagoon in the Distance." A colorful surprise in this stunning show is Jacopo Ami-goni (1682-1752); born in Naples, a student in Venice, an itinerant painter in Rome, Flanders, Bavaria and England (where he stayed and worked in 1730-1739), he ended his prolific life in Madrid as court painter to King Ferdinand VI. Here are the rich imagery of "Ve-nus and Adonis," "Bacchus and Ariadne" and "Europa and the Bull," painted in the bright but subtle colors for which he became famed while in England. "Venetian Eighteenth Century studied in Paris with André Lhote Painting," Thus, Agnew & Sons, 43 and in London with Cecil Collins; Old Bond Street, WI, through July

Surprising Satisfaction From 'Emerald Forest'

By Sheila Benson Les Angeles Times Service

MYSTERIOUS and powerful,
"The Emerald Forest" is the summer's greatest surprise and most solid satisfaction.

John Boorman has made an intelligent film of surpassing beauty:

behind it. In its story of lamily and loss, growth and separation, it speaks to the deepest feelings all people share. And in its sensuous and magical portrait of primitive tribal life, it may prove a classic.

The screenwriter, Rospo Pallenberg, who co-wrote "Excalibur" with Booman, has given the story of a boy kidnapped by Indians a colossal ending that seems a little like a metaphysical afterthought. But he has kept its core intact: the dogged faith of a father who for 10

Tommy (Charley Boorman), the boy has become Tomme, a fullfledged member of an almost unknown Amazonian tribe that calls itself the Invisible People. Markham, an American engineer, has been part of a group constructing an immense dam in the Amazon headlands. The dam has displaced a tribe called the Fierce People, who have consequently moved into the Invisible People's territory.

"The Emerald Forest" illuminates an exotic people with an al-most hypnotic fascination. All the film's elements conspire in that; its beautiful, otherworldly score by Imior Honrich; the cinematogra-phy of Philippe Rousselot ("Diva") and Simon Holland's production design, which give the film a hauntingly verdant look; the costumes and woven feathered headdresses by Christel Boorman and Clovis Bueno; and Peter Frampton's constantly changing body painting.

Such details make the jungle civi-lization profound and tangible and sharpen the conflict that follows the father's desire to bring his son home and the boy's feeling that he stready has a father (the tribal leader), a mother, a sweetheart and his sure place in the natural world.

There is another, larger issue, one that has preoccupied Boorman in almost every film ("Deliver-ance," "Hell in the Pacific," even "Excalibur"): the consequences when blundering outsiders invade or affront a civilization held in its own delicate balance. Here the damage is both to nature and to people: Markham's bringing of a deadly weapon into a Stone Age civilization is one of the most dreadful metaphors for this intru-sion into the natural order of

Capsule reviews of other films recently, released in the United

Paul Attanasio of The Washington Post on "Back to the Future":

In this whiting merry-go-round of a movie, everything is precisely machined, but nothing seems quite comedy, filled with enchantment, sweetness and zip. Marty McFly (Michael J. Fox) is a high school senior who pals around with Dr. Brown (Christopher Lloyd), a mad scientist. Marty's mother (Lea. Thompson) is a prudish scold, and his father (Crispin Glover) a over. Brown invents a time ma chine, and Marty is transported to 1955, where he meets his parents in high school. This is basically a one joke movie, so the writers, Bob Gale and Robert Zemeckis of "Used Cars" and "I Wanna Hold years has spent all his free time Your Hand" (Zemeckis also direct-searching for his son. Your Hand" (Zemeckis also direct-ed), work the basics. For all its When Bill Markham (Powers Boothe) finally encounters his son ents' inadequacies, a moment is miliar to everyone.

> Janet Maslin of The New York Times on "Day of the Dead":

Greatly admired in some circles as the horror film sardonic enough to let its zombies go shopping, George A. Romero's "Dawn of the Dead" had in its suburban-mall setting a central metaphor Romero may never top. "Day of the Dead" has a less startling setting, since most of it takes place underground, but it still affords Romero the opportunity for intermittent philosophy and saine, without compro-mising his reputation as the grisliest guy around. The dead have the edge, of course, so Romero keeps the few nondead characteristics about the fixlocked in discussion about the fu-ture of the human race and in suspicious gossip about the medical methods of one of their colleagues, whose nickname, Dr. Franken-stein, is something of an under-

ECONOMIC SCENE

U.S. Position Endangered By 2 Persistent Deficits

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

EW YORK — Budget Director David A. Stockman, in his June 5 address to the board of the New York Stock Exchange, said, "It is now nearly impossible to see where the political will and consensus will come from that is necessary to enact any plan big enough to balance the books—or even substantially close the gap."

Would the United States face a disaster if, as Mr. Stockman warned, budget deficits of $200 billion or more lie in prospect for the next several years?

A common belief is that big deficits and government borrow ing depress the economy by crowding out other borrowers. But Robert Ortner, chief economist of the Commerce Department, contends that this is a misconception.

In 1982, he says, there was apprehension that, because of the rising federal deficit, private borrowing would be crowded out; yet economic activity and private borrowing grew strongly in the next two years. In 1984, despite the growth of the deficit, the federal government's share of total borrowing shrank to 28 percent from

ing shrank to 28 percent from 38 percent in 1982.

"Why did the economy grow despite the rising deficit?" Mr.

Ortner asks. "It didn't. It grew in part because of it."

The budget deficit is a form of "dis-saving" — a reduction in the proportion of national income saved and an increase in the proportion spent on consumption, which is stimulative. Yet, whether less public saving is translated into real growth depends on two other factors: the rate at which the economy is already operating and the ease or tightness of Federal Reserve monetary

A the end of 1982 the operating rate of American industry was down to about 70 percent and the unemployment rate was nearly 11 percent. With that much slack and an accommodative monetary policy, Mr. Ortner finds that the deficit contributed to growth, rather than retarded it. Today, after more than two years of growth, with rising business investment, there is less idle capacity but the economy is still not skinnight. Industry is operating at less than 81 percent of capacity and the unemployment rate is 7.2 percent. The budget deficit still looks more stimulative than inflationary.

But this is not the whole deficit story. For the budget deficit is aggravating the other great IIS deficit: the international trade ggravating the other great U.S. deficit: the international trade deficit. This year, according to the commerce secretary, Malcolm Baldrige, the trade deficit is likely to soar above $140 billion and could reach $150 billion, compared with last year's record $123

With such trade deficits piling up, the United States would be soon become the world's biggest debtor. The implications, says James D. Robinson 3d, chairman of American Express Co., are "very serious" — financial market volatility, a compromising of the independence of American monetary policy and the danger of rapid dollar drops that could rekindle inflation.

The trade deficit is acting as a drag on the economy and damaging American industries dependent on foreign markets and competing with imports. The trade deficit is by no means independent of the federal budget deficits. On the contrary, as Martin S. Feldstein of Harvard, President Ronald Reagan's former chief economic adviser, observes, 'The primary reason that the United States has become a capital importer and an international debtor is our vast federal budget delicit."

He says this is a universal story that explains the capital inflows of the Latin debtor nations as well as our own: When the government borrows on a vast scale, it creates a vacuum in the domestic capital market that sucks in capital from abroad. Those huge borrowings in turn drive up real interest rates on

U.S. Still Has 7.3% Jobless

Rate Unchanged For 5 Months

By Jane Seaberry

WASHINGTON - The U.S. civilian unemployment rate in June remained at 7.3 percent for the fifth consecutive month despite the contimed deterioration in manufac-turing employment, which now is below the levels of last summer. Few new jobs were added to the U.S. economy in June, according to the Labor Department's survey of businesses. The number of people without jobs remained at 8.4 milion, the same level since February. The number of people working dropped from 107.0 million in May to 106.4 million in June.

The memployment report did not hold out much hope for a strong rebound in economic activity during the second half of the year, and economists said they would not be surprised if the unemployment rate rose next month, Last month, the number of fac-tory jobs declined by 45,000, bringing the total of factory jobs lost since January to 220,000. Employ-ment in service industries, however, rose by 85,000 jobs. Since the recovery began more than two years ago the gap between services and manufacturing has widened, in large part because of the influx of imports that have captured sales from American mamfacturers, and sluggish growth, nomists said.

"A look at the employment anges over the entire 31 months of the current recovery underscores the extent of the employment re-structuring that has occurred in the nation's factories," said Janet L. Norwood, commissioner of the Buu of Labor Statistics.

"Manufacturing as a whole has recovered about 58 percent of the number of jobs lost during the 1981-1982 recession." she said, adding that major industries which have lost employment are stead feet. have lost employment are steel, tex-tiles, chemicals, petroleum, and coal and leather products.

The deterioration in manufac-turing "will go on for a while," said David Wyss, chief financial econo-mist for Data Resources Inc. The decline in manufacturing employ-ment is part of a long-term trend that accelerated because of "the ridiculous overvaluation of the dollar" that has made imports more

Independent TV Stations on a Roll

But the Days of Staggering U.S. Prices May Be Ending

By Thomas C. Hayes New York Times Service

LOS ANGELES - The realm of independent, commercial television stations has never been richer in the United States. Staggering sums have recently, been paid for big independent stations in major markets

Moreover, the number of independents has dou-bled in the last six years, and many of these stations that are well established in major markets have captured increasing numbers of viewers, raised advertising rates closer to those of stations affiliated with the networks, and posted consistently rising profits.

"After a decade of growth from second-class citizens to fully competitive television stations, the independents now have an entrenched position in the starting incups of most large cities, said Paul Kagan, an industry analyst and publisher of Broadcast Investor.

Nevertheless, many analysts and bankers say they believe that the big gains of these stations against the network affiliates have about caded, and predict a period of slower overall

The Association of Independent Television Stations is predicting that the independents' share of total spot ad revenues will remain unchanged, at about 23 percent, in the next five years. The association estimates that the independents will get $4.2 billion of a total $18 billion in 1990, compared with $2.2 billion of $9.3 billion in 1984. Bidding battles for available programs have sharply increased costs. With 214 independents now operating—commared with about 200 affili-now operating — compared with about 200 affili-ates for each of the three major networks — the risks for investors in new independent stations appear much higher.

"There is a limit to how far this can go," said John S. Reidy, a media analyst with Drezel Burnham Lambert. "The independents have to look different, with something that people like. But that is getting increasingly difficult."

Martin Pompadur, managing general partner of Television Station Partners, pointed out that the profit margins at independent stations are generally lower than those of network affiliates: "Estab hished independents in major cities usually have margins of 30 to 40 percent, while margins for (Continued on Page 11, Col. 5)

Jobless Figures *Drive Dolla*r Down in U.S.

United Press Internation NEW YORK - The dollar eased Friday following the re-lease of U.S. unemployment data for June.

Foreign exchange trading was subdued as many partici-pants extended Thursday's Independence Day holiday into the weekend.

The U.S. Labor Department reported that civilian unem-ployment held at a steady 7,3 percent in June. But the closely watched number of people on nonfarm payrolls increased less than expected.

U.S. interest rates fell because many participants inter-preted Friday's unemployment report as a sign the economy was in a slow growth period.

Late New York prices and comparable Wednesday rates included: 2.9965 Deutsche marks, down from 3.0320: 25060 Swiss francs, down from 2.5405; 9.1275 French francs, down from 9.220; 1,911 Italian lire, down from 1,930; and 246.85 Japanese yen, down from 247,85.

The pound was up in Lon-don, closing at $1.3365 against Thursday's $1.3150.

Gold rose in London to $311.75 from $310.75 Thurs-

Head of Bonn Central Bank Sees Record Surpluses

By Warren Getler

FRANKFURT - The president of West Germany's central bank, citing surging exports, said Friday that he expected the country to post a record surplus in its current account for this year of $10 billion (30.3 billion Deutsche marks). He also projected a record $25 billion to $30 billion merchandise-trade surplus. Kari Otto Pöhl said cumulative trade-performance figures for the first five months of the year, scheduled to be released by the Bundesbank on Monday, led him to believe that surpluses in West Germany's 1985 trade accounts will "certainly fall at the higher end of expectations."

Under a new FCC rule, a media company can own 12 television stations, an increase from 7 stations. The Taft Broadcasting Co., which owns four affiliates and three independents, has received FCC approval to become the first company to reach the new limit. It will add three affiliates and two indepen-dents when its $755 million purchase of Gulf Broadcasting Inc., which includes seven radio stations, is completed in September.

Mr. Kagan, the broadcast analyst, said skeptics have repeatedly anticipated a slowdown in the overall growth of television, including the independent stations. The slowdown is still not in sight, he main-

"I don't think Murdoch overpaid for Metromedia," he said. He rea-soned that the newspaper publisher paid approximately 11 times the six stations' approximate cash flow projected for 1986. As for KTLA, the price works out to 9.7 times estimated cash flow for 1986.

"If Tribune hadn't paid it, some body else would have," he said. "You can assume that most of the large players in the industry want to expand their station groups." There is little debate about the independents' appetite for programs. They spent $637 million for syndicated programming last year, compared with $426 million by the network affiliates, according to the independents' trade association. In 1975, the combined purchases of syndicated programming totaled $242 million, with network affili-ates accounting for 69 percent.

Japan Considers Tokyo Bay Span

TOKYO — The Japanese government has tentatively de-cided to build a highway across Tokyo Bay, a newspaper re-ported Friday. The Construc-tion Ministry declined comment on the report.

The Nihon Keizai Shimbun said the proposed 10-year, one-trillion-yen ($4.03-hillion) pro-ject linking Kisarazu and Kawasaki would involve a five-kilometer (3.1-mile) bridge and a 10-kilometer undersea tunnel

The newspaper said no deci-sion had been made on whether the National Highway Authority or a private-sector consor-tium would undertake the pro-

U.S. Bank to Cut 1,745 Positions

NEW YORK - Manufacturers Hanover Corp. will eliminate 1,745 positions worldwide by the end of the year as part of its effort to cut operating ex-penses, a spokesman said Fri-

"Wages and benefits are the biggest part of our noninterest expenses and we are trying to get our arms around it," the spokesman said. The employees whose positions are to be elimi-nated will be absorbed into other jobs, filling spots normally vacated by attrition or retire-ment, the spokesman said. The cuts are expected to result in savings of about $54.6 million this year, the spokesman added.

The spokesman said the company had been trying to cut the rate of growth in its operating expenses from the level of 20 percent per year in the early 1980s. Manufacturers Hanover had net income of $100.2 mil-lion in the first quarter of 1985.

The Lombard rate is the rate at which the Bundesbank supplies short-term credit to commercial banks that have pledged securities as collateral. The discount rate is the rate at which the bank supplies

The council in its half-year review of monetary policy, also decided to maintain a 3-percent to 5percent growth corridor for expansion in the West German money supply, which currently is growing at an up to 4.5 percent.

Several leading economists, in-cluding Karl Heinrich Oppenlaender of the IFO economic re-search institute in Munich, argue that the Bundesbank's money supply targets are too restrictive in light of sluggish private demand and should be reset to foster money supply growth of 5.0 to 5.5 percent

But Mr. Pöhl indicated that no such change in official money sup-ply targets or in official interest rates is likely for some time.

Rather than lower the Lombard or discount rates, Mr. Pohl said, the Bundesbank is inclined to encourage a further downward trend in money market rates, aiming to push rates toward 5 percent by offering security repurchase agree-ments at consistently lower rates.

The battle is for the right to represent the United States in men's single sculls in the 1984 Olympics. One seat is available; four exceptional but generally unknown athletes, simon-pure ama-teurs, are competing for it.

Amateurism, invented by the British to avoid the mingling of sweat among social classes, has been a dead issue since the first stadium seat was rented for cash. But rowing, virtually spectator-proof, never got the word; it survives, even thrives, supported only by its own addicted competitors.

Those who competed at this level did so with DENNIS THE MENACE demonic passion. Yet there was no overt financial reward at the end, nor indeed was there even any covert financial reward, a brokerage house wanting and giving special privilege to the famed amateur. Yet the athletes were almost always the children of the upper middle class, privileged, affluent, a group that in this society did not readily seek hardship. One could understand the son of a ghetto family playing in the schoolyard for six hours a day hoping that basketball was a ticket out of the slum; it was hard to understand the son of Beacon Hill spending so much time and subjecting himself to so much pain to attain an honor that no one even understood. Perhaps in our society the true madness in the search for excellence is left for the amateur."

Halberstam's concern is not economics but passion, true madness. The complexities of rowing as an athletic task, of its structure as an athletic task, of its structure as an international sport, are only its structure as an internanonal sport, are only sketched in passing. "The Amateurs" is not about rowing but about the four rowers: Tiff Wood, the favorite — Beacon Hill, Harvard crew, legendarily tolerant of pain, a bronze medalist in the World Championships; John Biglow — Yale, "powerful, relentless, indefatigable," also a bronze medalist; Joe Bouscaren — Yale, the most abrasive, the small-coach, acknowledged Zen master of rowing, for these Olympic Games demoted from coaching the glamorous eight-oared shells to handling the lowly, and quirky, scullers.

"Swing" is the oarsman's term for the moment when all eight oars approach perfect synch, the boat leaps and drives, the sum is greater than the parts. It is the sensation that makes athletes fall in love with is the sensation that makes attnetes that in love with crew. In the single sculls, however, cooperation is out, purest ego is in. "You could be on a championship eight which won all its races," says Tiff Wood, "but you might only be the fiftieth-best oarsman in the country. But the single sculler is the best, and everyone in the world of rowing knows it."

What John Biglow says he likes most about swing is that "it allowed you to trust the other men in the boat. A boat did not have swing unless everyone was putting out in exact measure, and because of that, and only because of that, there was the possibility of true trust among the oarsmen." Trust is a problem, particularly in the matter of effort. What makes a sculler, or any other solo athlete, is insistence on full responsibility for one's athletic fate — no trust required. And level of effort is exactly what obsesses these individuals, in training as well as racing. Who is making how much effort? When in the race, when in the training program? How can I make more?

In his usual fashion, Halberstam, a former oarsman, interviews everyone, triangulates every opinion, gets incisive insights and hard judgments even from the oarsmen's mothers. The result is pure reporting on a level undreamed of elsewhere in sports. It is also an extended rumination on the limits of human effort, on true madness in the search for excellence. What further sets it apart from other writing about sports is that most of it is presented from the viewpoint of members of society whom circumstances have blessed with unlimited expectations. Thus in a peculiar way it tells what the best and brightest — Halberstam's larger obsession — are up to. This is one way that they learn their expectations are not unlimited after all. In his usual fashion, Halberstam, a former oars

"But Ray Knight, who earlier had faded three times with the bases loaded, doubled home Gary Carter in the top of the 19th, on his 10th at bat of the game. That began a five-run inning for the Mets that held o when the Braves rallied for two ins with two outs in the last gasp of the longest major-league game

The game ended with the Mets' Ron Darling striking out Camp.
The Braves used 22 players, the Mets 21, with seven pitchers on each side. Keeping score was a task that eluded even Mets pitcher Tom

"I could have won it, I could have lost it and I could have saved it — and I didn't do any of those things," Gorman said.

Gorman said. "When you throw a pitch in the 18th inning that someone can hit out, it's embarrassing. But, then, I've never pitched before at 3:30 in the morning.

The Mets had taken an 11-10 lead in the 18th on an error by. Camp that set up a sacrifice fly by Len Dykstra. Atlanta's Terry Harper prolonged the game in the bottom of the 13th with a two-strike, two-run homer off Gorman. That negated Howard Johnson's two-run homer in the top of the inning off Terry

The Mets also had a game-saving rally, tying the score at 8 in the top of the ninth on Dykstra's infield single off Bruce Sutter.

That followed the Braves' fourrun eighth, in which Murphy donbled in three runs.

Rain delayed the scheduled 7:40 P.M. start of the game for 1 hour 24 minutes. The star pitchers of both staffs, Dwight Gooden of the Mets and Rick Mahler of the Braves, then went to work before a sellout crowd of 44,947. But Gooden was removed after two and one-third innings when the game was held up by rain for another 41 minutes, and Mahler was knocked out in the

Two other Mets also got an early departure. Manager Dave Johnson and Darryle Strawberry were eject-ed from the game in the 17th imning for protesting a called third strike by umpire Terry Tata.

It Was a Game To Remember

The Associated Press ATLANTA -- Said the Mets' first baseman, Keith Hernandez, "I saw things I'd never seen in a game before in my career. At the 17th inning, I figured I just had to call somebody. I called my brother Gary and told him I just wanted him to

Teammate Ray Knight, who left the bases loaded three times but doubled home the game winning run in the 19th: "I think I've never been more ex-cited about one base hit."

The Braves' center fielder Dale Murphy, who played the whole game: "Til be feeling it for the next week." After pitcher Rich Camp hit his home run in the 18th, "I figured, This has got to be our night."

Harper, who tied the score with a two-out, two-run homer in the 13th, on whether such games are fun: "It's fun to win 'em." Braves pitcher Rick Mahler, reminded that he started the game: "Did !?" Ann Patrick of Smyrna, Georgia, who did not leave her seat in the upper deck until the final out: "It was great."

Curren Routs Connors; Rain Halts 2d Match

By Andrew Warshaw The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England - Ke-vin Curren powered his way into his first men's singles final at the Wimbledon tennis championships on Friday, defeating a lackluster Jimmy Connors, 6-2, 6-2, 6-1, in just 1 hour 32 minutes. But Curren's opponent in Sun-day's final was still to be decided, play for the day.

Jarryd had taken the opening set,
6-2: Becker took the second, 7-6. And the score in the third was 1-1 when officials decided to call off the semifinal until Saturday, when it was to be resumed before the final of the women's singles, between defending champion Mar-tina Navratilova and her long-time rival, Chris Evert Lloyd.

Curren, the South African-born naturalized U.S. citizen who ousted defending champion John McEnroe in the quarterfinals - also in straight sets - served 17 aces and hit stream of service winners to send Connors, 32, the No. 3 seed, out of the tournament.

Curren's victory ensured a new name on the men's trophy this year. Neither Jarryd, the No. 5 seed, nor Becker, the unseeded 17-year-old, have reached the final.

The first match had begun al-most two hours late because of a storm that swamped the All England club and sent torrents of water cascading off the stands. Three trees were struck by lightning and, when the action began, Curren struck with his own lightning, serving an ace on only the second point of the first semifinal.

Connors, reliving the horror of last year's final against McEnroe, when he won just four games, managed only 16 points against Cur-ren's serve. Winner after winner flashed by the 32-year-old American and two-time champion, who only occasionally managed to produce his renowned service return.

When he was not being beaten by the pace of his eighth-seeded opponent's serve, Connors made a post of unforced errors, especially from the back of the court from where he netted a spate of fore-Playing positively and aggressively, the West German teen ager broke Jar-ryd, 23, in the fifth game and staved off two break points on his own serve for a 4-2 lead. Two games later, Jarryd did succeed in breaking back and held for 5-4.

In the next game, Becker saved a set point with an uninhibited crosscourt volley and finished off the game with an ace. He did it again two games later to level at 6-6 and send the set into a tie breaker.

An early break gave Jarryd a 3-1 lead in the tie breaker but Becker stormed back to take the next six points and square the match. Each player held serve at the start of the third set and the match was delicately poised when the rain, which had plagued the first week of the tournament, began falling again.

The Associated Press

LONDON—Bed hangings made of Chinese embroidered silk. which lay in an attic for more than 200 years in their original box, are among 700 precious objects from 220 stately homes going to the Treasures of Britain" show, opening in November at the National Gallery of Art in Washington. The art historian Gervase Jack-son-Stops, the British organizer of the exhibition, found the bangings at Calke Abbey in Derbyshire.

J. Carter Brown, director of the Washington museum, said the Na-tional Gallery was being "turned upside down" to clear the East Wing for paintings, sculpture, tapestries, arms and armor, furniture, jewels, porcelain and silver collect-ed by wealthy British families.

"I demanded Article 7," Martha said, "C. C. may not come home from a tennis game and tell me what a wonderful woman player he had for a partner." "I gave her that one," C. C. said, "on the condition she wouldn't make me drive into town for a pound of butter just as I was ready to leave for the court. Martha said, "Tell him about

"I must give her 24 hours' notice on people I've invited for dinner, and she has to give me a week's notice on house guests," C. C. told me. "We've drawn up a list of house guests who have to be agreed on by both parties. They include friends of our children; relatives, including teen-age nieces and nephews, cousins, and in-laws; and people we haven't seen in five years who just found out we have a house on the Cape. Martha's mother may only stay for one week or seven-days, whichever is the greater. My mother can stay for a similar period of time, but Martha has the option, if it gets to be too much for her, of taking off and visiting a friend on Long Island."

Martha picked up the document.

'Article 9 refers to missing clothing and other objects such as sneakers, tennis rackets, boat and fishing gear and any other vacation paraphernalia that C. C. has misplaced. I am no longer responsible for find-ing any of the above-named things, nor will I be held accountable because said objects were lost."

"I agreed to the clause on the condition that she take care of the kids on rainy days." C. C. said.

"Article 10 was the one we had the biggest row about," C. C. said. "It has to do with our sailboat Martha wanted a clause stating that she no longer had to set foot on my sailboat, or any friend's sail-boat, for the entire summer. I said she couldn't do that to me because she is a very important part of the crew, particularly when nobody else is around."

Martha said, "The compromise is that I will only go on board if C. C. can find absolutely no one to sail with. If I do and he yells at me just once, I am to be taken to the nearest port and put ashore."

The Decline (and Fall?) of Yuppie Civilization

By Maureen Dowd New York Times Service NEW YORK - Lately, Gil Schwartz has been suffering guilt pangs all over the Upper West

"There are things I feel ashamed of doing now," he said, "like dining on Columbus Avenue or walking my baby in Central Park in her McClaren stroller or eating David's cookies.

"I feel like everything I do is a trend," said the 34-year-old corporate public relations executive. I can't buy imported cheese in good conscience anymore, or state-of-the-art booties. I can't even buy a feisty little Beaujo-

"There's something vaguely nauscating now about being a yuppie," he said. "No one wants to be called that anymore."

There have not yet been any reports of Akitas, Apricas or Adidases being flung out of windows. (For the unimitiated, those are dogs, strollers and shoes of choice for yuppies, or young urban pro-fessionals.) Nonetheless, a number of cases of "yuppie guilt" and "yuppie denial" have been diagnosed, a syndrome that analysts say signals the end of yuppie civilization as we know it.

"By the end of the summer," predicted Lee Atwater, a Republican political consultant, "the yuppie movement will be dead." Michael Kinsley, witing in Gentlemen's Constant, when the summer is the summer of the summer is the summer of the summer, and the summer of the summer, as the summer of the summ Gentleman's Quarterly, reveals that shame has led the once unabashed yappies to hole up "be-hind the boited doors of their condominiums, bentwood rockers jammed up under the door-knobs."

"Some," he said, "have made the tragic discovery that a Brie can actually get too ripe." Many young professionals in Manhartan agree that, with the recent spate of "yuppie bashing," as one calls the mocking news coverage, they no longer find the label clever and amusing. Karen Clark, a 27-year-old buyer at the clothier Brooks Brothers, said she and her husband, Brooks, had noticed a new "hostility." She recalled that when their gas barbecue grill was being moved into their apartment recently, two observers looked at each other knowingly and hissed,

"It started out as sort of a funny thing," Mrs. Clark said. "But now it's turned into a bad thing that implies shallow people who care more about Gucci shoes than their mother's birthday." She said she had become somewhat defensive about the assumption that yuppies live "an acquisitive lifestyle that has nothing to do with real feelings or intellect.

"I start saying things like, 'Oh,
I go to foreign films, too. I've seen
'Jules and Jim,' " she said.
Although they may crave individuality and loathe their label, many of this generation of grand acquisitors say they remain com-fortable with the basic tenets of the yuppie lifestyle.

On the whole, in spite of the pejorative aspect, yuppies still take a masochistic glee in being yuppies," said Jonathan Silver, 27, a financial analyst. "If you can in fact think about yourself in this way, it says something about your own achievement record and success rate, and that's an important and valuable thing."

But in the comic strip Doonesbury, Michael Doonesbury balks when the "Y word," as he disdainfully calls it, is mentioned at the advertising agency where he works. And, indeed, the retreat from the yuppie image has been started collecting Hawaiian shirts duly noted by Madison Avenue, which had frantically been pitch-ing products to this consumer-minded group.

American Express has now begun a campaign that salutes "those who know there's more to life than a VCR, a food processor and a new pair of running shoes." The company plans to pick young people across the country who have combined successful careers with volunteerism and award them a vacation and a $1,000 bequest to their favorite charity.

"The smart marketer has to recognize that most thinking yuppies are going to resent being looked upon only as mannequins on which to drape all these elitist products," says Jane Fitzgibbon of Ogilvy & Mather, the advertising agency that handles American

Many of those interviewed talked of the ways in which they were trying to break out of the smothering, collective image. "I won't buy any product that has an ad with a gry in hom-rimmed glasses," said Schwartz. Dan Leffell, a 30-year-old cor-porate lawyer, said he had been trying to put distance between himself and the yuppie tag but felt discouraged. He recalled that he

"Yuppies keep trying to find avenues out of yuppiedom, but they end up just starting a new trend that catches up with them. he said. "It's only a matter of time before yuppie men start wearing earrings and Brooks Brothers starts selling earrings."

Renee Ickson, a 25-year-old public relations executive, says thinks about it all the time, how I can strive to be different." She eschews Yoplait yogurt and sneakers with business suits and headphones and certain restau-

new surge of altruism.
"I bought a "We Are the World" album - does that count?" asked David Blum, a 29-year-old writer. That's about as altruistic as yuppies are going to get this year."

Betsy Webb, a 27-year-old assistant legal supervisor who vol-unteers at a church shelter for the homeless, said she saw little evidence of blossoming humanitarianism among her peers.

"All they're concerned with is which summer house to go into." she said. "When we need new volunteers, my co-workers say, 'I wish I could do that,' and I say, Why don't you skip squash or skip a night of hanging out at the bar, and spend the night in the shelter? But they say, 'Maybe next year."

Many specialists in social trends maintain, however, that the current backlash will lead to more social concern.

"There's going to be a rebirth of social consciousness," said Atwater, the political consultant, citing as a harbinger the renais-sance of 1960s music, as well as the boom in sales of psychedelic clothing and peace symbols.

"When yuppies start having children, then they'll start thinking about what kind of society they want to live in," said Marilee Hartley, a co-author of "The Yuppie Handbook," "Children will have a humanizing effect."

Oxford Is Kindergarten For British Math Whiz

Ruth Lawrence, 13, has been awarded a first-class honors degree in mathematics from Oxford University after two years of study, instead of the usual three. Before that, she had never gone to school: her father, Harry Lawrence, a computer consultant, taught her al home. She said she would stay in Oxford for at least three more years to work on a doctorate - which usually takes five years.

Daniel Elisberg. 54. has been convicted of disturbing the peace during a May protest in San Fran. cisco and will serve a two-day jaij sentence. The "Pentagon Papers" activist was demonstrating against the Reagan administration's trade embargo against Nicaragua,

Lillian Gish, 88, who plays Alas Alda's mother in "Sweet Liberty," 2 comedy being filmed on Long ly land, says she turned down the role four times "because I thought they had confused me with my sister Dorothy - she's the comedian of our family." The film, about a historian's adventures while a movie is being made of his book, is written and directed by Alda and also stars Michael Caine and Michelle Pfeif. fer. . . . Carl Bernstein has signed an unusual agreement with his former wife, the writer Nora Ephron, and with the director Mike Nichols and Paramount Pictures that gives the former Washington Post investigative reporter an unofficial advisory role in the film version of Eph-ron's novel "Heartburn." The film will star Meryl Streep and Mandy Patinkin. The book is considered a thinly veited account of Bernstein and Ephron's marriage.

The former wife of Senator Edward M. Kennedy says she feels betrayed by a forthcoming biogra-phy. Joan Kennedy told The Boston Globe that she tried to talk her former administrative assistant Marcis Chellis, out of writing "Living With the Kennedys: The Jom Kennedy Story." A Simon & Schuster editor, Fred Hils, said the book described Mrs. Kennedy's thoughts on the 1969 drowning of Mary Jo Kopechne after the car in which Kopechne was riding driven by the Massachusetts Democrat plunged off a bridge.
